The woman had disappeared behind the curtains and sought retirement in the recesses of the store. It was apparent that there was some tragic connection between the man and the statue who was posing as an advertisement for the shee firm. What was it? The man was uncommunical tive. When he had gained control of himself, he went away.

The woman who played the statue and the man who fainted in the street at sight of her were once loving man and wife. Her name is Madeline Rechell, and she resides in South St. Louis. To her employers she tells a pitiful story of wedded life, desertion and suffering. Accustomed to plenty all her life, she was unable to enter any vocation when thrown upon her own resources. She accepted the place offered by the firm to pose as an advertisement. St. Louis Republic.

"I believe she's not a fakir. Did you notice her accent? And I think she said something about heather." They turned and watched the woman. She was respectably dressed, but mud and rain had soaked her skirts. Their rebuff had evi dently made her timid. She did not immediately address others who followed.

"Scotch heather, sir," she answered, and he could see that she reddened and kept her eyes lowered. She opened the box and nervously fingered the dried flowers lying therein.

To Raise a State Capitol.

H. Sheeler of Chicago has made a proposition to lift the massive capitol of Ohio and place another story under the structure. Mr. Sheeler says he will accomplish this remarkable feat for administrative talent and credit of the banker minister Necker, when he went so far as to propose to his compatriots an accommodation with the monarchy aking.

The present capitol is imadequate to of Versailles. However, Jefferson was capable of studying France better than be needs of the various state depart. other foreign travelers. He did not con tent himself with a delusive sojourn in ture. Plans have been adopted to this end, but the great expense that would be entailed has aroused opposition to the plans.

The Ohio capitol, built of native limestone, is one of the most massive buildings in the country and covers more than two acres. It is estimated there are many hundred thousand tons of stone in the structure. Mr. Sheeler proposes to raise this immense structure without disturbing a single occupant of the building. He will cut off the building at the base and raise it with screws.
